The Seaman Family Research Centre is a medical research facility located at Foothills Medical Centre in Calgary. Founded in 1999, over the past decade the Seaman Family Research Centre has grown to become one of Canada's leading medical imaging research programs. There are now over 60 people using the Centre's infrastructure for a variety of research projects.

Collectively, our research efforts are focused on advancing medical imaging techniques. Individuals with expertise in science, engineering and other technical disciplines play key roles in enabling the Centre's transformative ability to better understand and detect disease and to develop and deliver novel treatments.

Please join us to for a series of public presentations highlighting our current research efforts.

The Seaman Family Centre is the result of a unique collaboration between the People of Calgary, the Province of Alberta, The Faculty of Medicine at The University of Calgary, and Alberta Health Services. Support from the Seaman Family was instrumental in establishing the Centre. More information can be found at mrcentre.ca.
